

love, ordinary hardships will have no terrors for them. — If he is the right kind, as he seems to be, he will continue to work hard, and won't mind it so long as she is contented. But little Mrs. Taper was. Queenie Sanford, the well-known business woman, who married after the novelty has worn off that she will tire of this love idyl, in which hard work and self-sacrifice play so important a part, and long for the scenes of her former triumphs, for the pretty life of admiration of men, and all that goes with it. — I don't know. However, let us not cross that bridge.

John D. Rockefeller stopped playing

prise, a very nice dinner was served at her friends at the Plaza, which was quite like the dinner party of any rich woman, with plenty of flowers and no lack of the expensive, sparkling and delicious champagne. It was at this time that in giving orders for the dinner Mrs. Green stated plainly that she wanted it to be of the best, and when she was told that a satisfactory dinner would be served, she was obliged to move an eyelash, but calmly ordered that the preparations for such a feast should be begun at once. But even more amazing than the fact that Mrs. Hetty had been able to command the famous apartments at the Plaza and entertaining her friends in a fashion befitting her wealth, is the latest story of her, in pursuance of her policy of doing up "brothers." Her policy of starting out has put herself in the hands of a beauty doctor, and has paid $300 for a course of treatments. It is said that this has effected a wonderful transformation has taken place in the personal appearance of this excellent lady. She has emerged from the steamings and massagings of the beauty doctor's treatment, and is now a very different person, and with a pretty rose-pink bloom on her cheeks. The clever fingers of the hairdresser have added a soft white puff of hair here and there, and she is now the picture of the appearance of a fashionable, well-groomed woman, and the dressmaker has completed this marvelous metamorphosis by handsome, becoming and up-to-date gown. The friends of Mrs. Hetty, when her friends told her she looked like an 18th century Marquise, and it is pretty safe to conclude that never before in her life has Mrs. Green heard anything which pleased her so much. It is said she is playing the game for all it is worth is proved by her intention of taking a cottage at Newport this Summer. It is also said that she has been thinking of this for her daughter, whom, of course, much of her money will go on her death, and whom she desires to see take the place in society to which this money has enabled her to attain. It is not to be at all surprising if Mrs. Hetty got a good deal of fun out of it all herself. No woman, no matter how hard or practical she may seem, is entirely without a touch of the womanly, and called, of her sex. To look well, to

Have pleasant things said to her, to be treated with perhaps more or less consideration, but vanity—soothing, graceful consideration, to be in life a certain amount of agreeable, social diversion is something to which no woman is insensible. The woman who goes thru the life of a milkmaid, as Mrs. Vanderbilt has said, to bear with her to the end—"A blighted experience, a rancor within."

It is something which every woman has a right to expect, and if her life has been without it she has been cheated of the life she should have had. Mrs. Green is undoubtedly like other women, and having sternly denied herself any indulgence in these feminine pleasures for so many years, will now, as she has said, "milk" to "let herself go" to a very proper and dignified extent, get a surprising amount of real satisfaction out of this new experience.

Imagine a pink-cheeked, plump, armed milkmaid in overalls and a jacket! Of course, no one can. The very thought is iconoclastic in the highest degree and not to be entertained for a moment. But the milkmaid, as the figures in poetry and fiction is this same milkmaid, seated on her little stool in her fresh cotton dress, her sleeves rolled up, revealing the round white arm, and the stream of rich milk flowing thru her rosy fingers into the pail beneath. Charming, fascinating creature, (in poem and story), and the gentle, the calm, under this condition, undoling, dear to the hearts of us all. Now we are told she is to be robbed of all this delicate, dainty romance by being compelled to milk her cows in overalls, and the stream of milk, the milk of New York has just issued an order that no milk shall be allowed to enter New York which has not been taken from the cows under this condition. Naturally the girls have rebelled, and as most of the milking has been done by the daughters of the farmers, those who depend upon the sale of the lactical fluid for their support, the girls, who in part, are in a state of mind. But who could blame the girls? Certainly no one with a drop of poetry or sentiment in his makeup.

The curtain has fallen on Mrs. Altrud Vanderbilt. She has been divorced. She has been awarded an absolute divorce from her husband with the custody of her little six-year-old boy. While she is just as much divorced now as she could be, she is not free to marry again, if she wishes to, for a final decree, which will give her the right to resume her maiden name and marry again in New York, will not be granted, contrary, cannot marry again under the laws of New York until she is dead, or unless at the end of five years the Supreme Court gives him permission to do so. The court, under this condition, cannot be true, that Mrs. Vanderbilt originally demanded $10,000,000 for her little son, Mr. Vanderbilt only being willing to give $2,500,000. The court was induced to compromise at $2,500,000. This will be given her in trust for the boy. Her personal fortune is quite sufficient for her own wants, but she has the idea of a young child cheated out of his rights by the misconduct of the father. During her life with Mr. Vanderbilt she became very much interested in the life of the horse, and a better judge of the fine points of a horse than even he. It is now rumored that she will turn her farm near New York into a training ground for racing horses, and enter the same with her former husband and Reginald Vanderbilt, who is also a great turfman. Horses and yachts are her two hobbies, and she is a very good rider.

The latest report with regard to the marriage of Anna Gould and Helle de Sagan denies the sensational story that they were married in New Jersey before leaving for Europe, but affirms that the ceremony was made at a dinner in Paris on June 14. It will be both a civil and religious ceremony, the latter performed by a Protestant clergyman. The ceremony will be witnessed by the written consent of every member of her family to her marriage, which disposes of that all-important money subject. Well, we wish to hope that she will have better luck this time.

No one can fail to admire the luck and courage of Bristow Draper, son of the Lieutenant-Governor of Massachusetts, who, in spite of the opposition of his family, has married a girl whom he loved, and is now supporting her and his two-months-old baby as a spinster in a cotton mill at $1.25 a day. He is determined to have a better place soon, if conscientious attention to duty can bring it. The little family live in a very humble cottage, and it is needless to say that the little family are growing largely from their fund of affection to make things go. It is all perfectly right, and being young and deeply in and shall feel satisfied with any measure that protects the flag from abuse. There is no question of politics in these bills, and there are no appropriations as to the North, the South, the East, or the West, but a united country, entering Congress for a clean flag."

Judge Kimball said for the veterans' members, by the direction of the Commanding General of the United States Army of the Republic, and representing, as I do, the 300,000 old soldiers wearing this button, I come in their name to ask you to pass the bill to protect the desecration that which we fought for. To the old soldiers the flag means everything. It means that which they represent to the youth of the nation. Consider we love it more, and to us it is a matter of very great sorrow when we see desecrations, such as you see in as to the flag, and I would like to say a word to say, and I say it with all the emphasis that I am capable of, for the sake of the old soldier, for the sake of the young men coming upon the young generation, upon the young generation, a law which will stop the desecration of "Old Glory." I am not arguing for the sake of both bills, but I would argue, also, for that both bills are good, although the Senator that of Past Commander-in-Chief Senator Warner to the other; but what we want is some law which will stop the desecration and put the flag where it belongs. The Grand Army left it when we separated in 1865."

Mrs. Ball was introduced as President of the Woman's Relief Corps of the Department of the Potomac.

"My chairman," said Mrs. Ball, President of the Woman's Relief Corps now, but Past Department President, just retired, of the Potomac Woman's Relief Corps, and chairman of the National Committee of the Department of Corps on prevention of the desecration of the flag. I appear also as the representative of the National President of the Woman's Relief Corps, Mrs. E. L. Jones, of Hion, N. Y., and of the other members of my committee, Mrs. Hen-

"I shall speak to you in a way, perhaps, that a woman might not be completely satisfied with. But it is absolutely necessary to bring before this committee some of the uses to which the flag of the country is put. For instance, when Gen. Ruggles took charge of the army, he had the flag used around all of the lavatory arrangements between the British and the American soldiers crossed; in the bottoms of the boats, and in the bottoms of every thing else in the Soldiers' Home. It was immediately had them torn out. You will find all over here in Georgetown to this day, in a plumber's institution, rolls of the American flag on it. You will find it used as a decoration for saloons; you will find it on beer bottles named 'Old Glory.' You will find it on whiskey bottles named 'Old Glory.' You will find it used in every way imaginable that it should not be used. I am afraid that you will walk over to the House of Representatives and find it on the wall. Get into it you must walk over the great seal of the United States, and walk upon it to enter the House. I am afraid that you will find it on the floor of the House of Representatives. I tell you, you have seen it."

vested rights has to-day much to do with this. In other words, the com-

"The bill will now, let to the House and be taken up there. It will be taken up if it is possible to get the House committee on Judiciary to act. The chairman of the Committee, Judge Clegg, is a Democrat, and I am not saying that he does not think it should pass. The thing to do is for every patriotic organization in the country to be busy with petitions to the Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary, and make it so interesting for him that he will have to permit the bill to be reported to the House. It will cost nothing to do this. Let the Supreme Court to decide and determine the constitutionality of the act. All members of the flag—a clean flag—should

Memorial Exercises at Brooklyn.

Devlin Post, Brooklyn, had unique memorial services at Fort Green, in Brooklyn, May 24, where the bones of the 14th Cavalry, which were exhumed after a very expensive monument is now being raised to the memory of these martyrs, will cost $250,000. The services were held on the spot where the 14th Cavalry camped before leaving for the field in 1861. There were about 15 this regiment present on the occasion with the old battle flags of the regiment. These made the younger element very enthusiastic. A fine address was made by Hon. Edward B. Shallow, who holds one of the highest positions on the Board of Education. The turn-out indicated that the work of patriotic education is having its effect, as the young audience were twice as large as on any previous occasion. One feature was a military mass at Navy Yard parade ground, and the ceremony was beautiful, solemn and impressive. Regular troops, marines, G. A. R. jackets, four battalions of the National Guard and other organizations are present with the G. A. R. and United States Veterans. Rev. J. Wesley Smith delivered and Gen. J. Franklin Roberts presided.

BATTLE OF VICKSBURG.

VICKSBURG.

The assault on Fort Hill, at Vicksburg, was one of the thrilling episodes of that great achievement. It was largely a hand-to-hand fight in the midst of the roar of cannon along the whole line, the bursting of shells, the fierce whiz of canister and the steady crash of musketry. The fighting was so close that hand grenades, bayonets, gun barrels and swords were in almost constant use. The picture represents the planting of the colors upon the enemy's works, and gives a hint of the immortal struggle around them.
